Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: .period ever known in the State began with a severe cold wave the latter part of December. 1915, and extremely low temperatures continued until about February 11th, with the exception of a warm wave in the south and west portions from about the 21st to the 24th. The month of January averaged colder for the entire State than any other 31 consecutive days on record. The temperature reached 68 below zero at Saco, which is the lowest of record in Montana. The next lowest was in January, 1888, when 65 1k1ow zero was recorded in Miles City, and the third lowest was in January, 1885, when 63 below zero was recorded at Poplar. The lowest on record at Havre, 57 below zero, occurred on January 27, 1916, Most of the last twothirds of February, and the greater part of March were mild. April, July, August and September were near normal, but May, June, Octoler, November and December were cold, the latter being the coldest December of record. The average annual precipitation has only been exceeded in 1908 and 1909, and the snowfall averaged greater than that of any other year since records have been kept. The average precipitation was considerably above normal in January, June, July and December, while the amounts for other months averaged near normal. The growing season was generally favorable for agricultural interests. Some.suffering to stock was caused by severe cold and deep snows, but ample supplies of hay and grain prevented serious...
